Présentation

Description

This seminar explores one of the richest periods in the history of the American cinema. For many reasons (economic as well as cultural and socio-political ones), the 1970s saw the budding of a new kind of cinema that was totally opposed to the earlier classical way of making films in Hollywood.

We will therefore first analyze these reasons, before dealing with this new conception of the cinema in those days. The core of that seminar will be the detailed study of the most typical features of the main films of the period. The classes will alternate the study of some representative scenes with a more global view of how the cinema was conceived by all these talented directors (Bogdanovich, Penn, Hopper, Altman, Coppola, Scorsese, Friedkin, De Palma...) and by some producers (Schneider, Rafelson, Evans...). There will also be a focus on William Friedkin, whose career does encompass the most striking facets of that conception of the cinema, the director having somehow managed to outlive the glorious 1970s to enrich his filmography in the 21st century with films that still ensue from the canon of the now late New Hollywood.

And so, we will eventually see the reasons why this New Hollywood ended in the early 1980s, and we will look for some traces of its heritage in the cinema of the following decades, not only in Hollywood (and in Friedkin's filmography) but also around the world (Lars Von Trier's and Thomas Vinterberg's "Dogme 95 Manifesto" sharing, for examples, some beliefs in the "Cinéma Vérité" advocated in the New Hollywood).

As mentioned before, the class will be based on the study of some excerpts, and this requires the active participation of the students who will be asked to comment on some aspects of the studied scenes.

Contrôle des connaissances

Every student following the seminar will be requested to write an essay on a film which reflects some aspects of the New Hollywood. The essay will be composed of the presentation of the film and of its main themes, as well as of the filmic analysis of one of its scenes that is representative of the studied period.

Informations complémentaires

Ouvert aux étudiant-es en mobilité sous réserve du nombre de places disponibles.
